Spinal cord hemangioblastomas. Spinal cord hemangioblastomas (SCHBs) are rare benign tumors. Fewer than 40 SCHB cases have been described in the literature, and most have been treated with surgical resection. We report on the clinical, radiographic, and pathological characteristics of 4 patients with SCHBs. The patients, aged 14 to 56 years (mean, 25.5 years), included 2 women and 2 men. Symptoms included back pain (2 patients) and progressive paraparesis (2 patients). Two patients had paraparesis secondary to SCHB, and 2 patients had paraparesis secondary to metastatic disease. The radiographic findings included 3 intramedullary tumors and 1 intervertebral tumor, with a mean maximum tumor diameter of 10.7 cm. Two tumors were located in the thoracic spine and 2 in the thoracolumbar region. Magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) was the most useful modality to determine the location, size, and extent of tumors and to differentiate SCHBs from other spinal neoplasms. All patients underwent surgical resection. Gross total resection was possible in 3 patients. One patient underwent subtotal resection. SCHBs have characteristic radiographic and MRI features. A preoperative diagnosis may be difficult in an appropriate clinical setting. The prognosis is good with gross total resection. Surgical resection is curative. Reducing the Ca content of leucite zirconia powder enables efficient densification. Leucite zirconia, by having a low Ca/Zr molar ratio, contains large amounts of oxygen vacancies. When it is sintered at low temperature, the oxygen vacancies react with the tetragonal matrix to form CaZrO₄. Since the formation of CaZrO₄ prevents densification of leucite zirconia, it is important to remove as much Ca as possible from the starting materials. In this study, we prepared samples using Ca-reduced (Ca/Zr molar ratio less than 0.6) leucite zirconia (LZ) and found that the Ca content could be reduced by about 20%, the sintering temperature increased, and the rate of densification increased. High-temperature sintering at 1400 degrees C for
