The use of living donor liver transplantation has increased the morbidity of living donors; thus, information about the location of the vascular pedicle is necessary. The purpose of the present study was to visualize the vascular pedicle using multidetector computed tomography (MDCT) in healthy, full-term neonates. Seventy-six healthy full-term neonates (36 female, 40 male) underwent MDCT for preoperative evaluation for abdominal organ donation. An 18-gauge needle was inserted into the abdominal aorta and advanced along the flow of the vascular pedicle until it reached the hepatic artery. Then, computed tomography angiography (CTA) was performed with a 64-row MDCT scanner. We attempted to visualize the vascular pedicle in all neonates. A total of 115 arterial vessels and 32 venous vessels were identified. The celiac artery was found to be the most frequent artery (n = 47; 40.2%), followed by the common hepatic artery (n = 43; 36.4%). We also identified the hepatic vein and its tributaries. The celiac axis was most commonly identified (n = 52; 44.4%), followed by the common hepatic artery (n = 43; 36.4%). The celiac artery and the celiac trunk (n = 25; 21.7%) and the common hepatic artery and the common trunk (n = 12; 10.4%) were most frequently recognized. The level of the celiac trunk in neonates was located at the bifurcation of the abdominal aorta in 61 cases (52.6%), and at the level of the inferior mesenteric artery in 23 cases (19.6%), and at the level of the inferior mesenteric artery and the bifurcation of the abdominal aorta in 7 cases (6.1%). The level of the common hepatic artery in neonates was located at the bifurcation of the abdominal aorta in 80 cases (69.0%), at the level of the common bile duct in 26 cases (22.2%), and at the level of the portal vein in 8 cases (6.9%). In newborns, the celiac trunk was the most frequent arterial vessel in which to find the vascular pedicle. We out for it. Kartik Aaryan. A beautiful ensemble of expressive playing from Aaryan, who is just on fire with his charm and charisma. Moreover, Nushrat Bharucha and Naseerudin Shah have been gracing us with their presence as well.

And, all these acting efforts are going to be doubled up with a sense of realism and fantasy. The film brings back the same heroines from this first movie, but they play different characters in this one. It is the story of the three bachelors, Anshul Sharma aka Gogo (Kartik Aaryan), Rohan (Akshay Kumar), and Chiku (Jackky Bhagnani), who are living together in New York. Rohan was a bad boy, while Chiku is a heavy sleeper. Gogo, on the other hand, is a huge heart-throb. As the three roommates have to live through a series of events which change their lives. The film brought back the same heroines from this first movie, but they play different characters in this one. Akshay Kumar. He is back and if one of the leads is the first choice of this writer, then the main lead Akshay Kumar is a natural.

Here, he has been given a complete makeover with a much bigger moustache. And, he looks totally sexy. Jackky Bhagnani. Kartik Aaryan and Naseerudin Shah are the villain and the comic relief in this film, respectively. And, it is with these characters that we feel that the film could have been more entertaining and more stylish. It is not that the film is a movie to laugh. It is a fun-filled and entertaining movie which leaves a very strong impression on you. And, after the credits, it also leaves a good effect on you. The film is directed by first-timer Imtiaz Ali and produced by him along with Sajid Nadiadwala. And, it is undoubtedly the biggest production of Kartik Aaryan. 2d92ce491b
