Acute pulmonary histoplasmosis in heart transplant patients: a report of two cases. We present two heart transplant patients with culture-proved Histoplasma capsulatum infection who developed acute pulmonary symptoms. Both patients responded to therapy with oral amphotericin B. Diagnostic dilemmas arose in both patients with the presence of co-existing histoplasmosis and the persistence of influenza-like symptoms despite the diagnosis of histoplasmosis. The diagnosis of histoplasmosis was made by sputum culture in each patient; in one patient, the diagnosis was made by postmortem lung culture. Our experience underscores the importance of maintaining a high index of suspicion in patients with persistent fever and pulmonary symptoms after heart transplantation. In Baltimore, that would save on the price but would take a toll on the economy of the city. Second, TV would be exempt from the anti- eviction law. That is not a remedy. It is just another source of income for the city. Third, the city can create an RDA and apply to HUD for the hotel tax to subsidize the RDA. Fourth, the city could mandate that the cable companies carry the city's channel. They would be forced to pay for it. Regulation by the city would not interfere with any part of the current system. It would just provide additional revenues. It is, of course, ironic that just as the city is engaging in whack-a-mole, the city itself is becoming a television station. But the city needs the revenues. The city needs to be able to compete with other jurisdictions for big contracts with the private sector. Four years ago, I wrote an article entitled "Repair The City." The headline was: "Money Talks," referring to the Washington Post article: "Boehner, Ryan Propose Budget." Time has demonstrated that the article was mostly right. The federal money bailout of the Obama administration, and especially his

How to Stop Impulse Spending Some people attribute the current recession to consumer overspending, which is partly true. Of course, the credit crisis and that recession were not caused by consumer spending; it was caused by an unsustainable rise in debt. But much of the consumer spending that fueled the 1990s economic boom was driven by American's experience of rising incomes. (Another factor was the huge increase in home ownership that occurred in the 1990s.) When they experienced their own rise in income, people started to spend in order to enjoy the gains. By the mid-2000s, the top 1 percent of Americans, whose incomes had been relatively stagnant for more than 20 years, were only making slightly more than they had made in the early 1980s (see chart). In addition, the incomes of the top 95 percent of Americans remained virtually flat, despite the rise in overall income in the United States. Even so, people started to spend, as demonstrated by the introduction of the term "dramatic charge" for the housing boom. They were spending because they knew the Fed would use monetary policy to keep the economy growing and ensure their rising incomes kept pace with price inflation. This time, as incomes stagnate and prices soar, people are spending because they're not getting any increase in their incomes. This can be expected to be a huge stimulus to economic growth, by ensuring that the prices paid for goods and services rise as incomes rise. However, for people in the top 1 percent, there's another problem with this situation. Because of their high incomes, it's not just those in the top 1 percent who see no rise in their incomes. The incomes of the top 10 percent have fallen, and those of the top 20 percent have declined. But the incomes of the remaining 80 percent of Americans have barely moved. This means that they are living on borrowed money and are no longer paying back even the low rate of interest on their debt 3c33713323
